Supporting residents with Dementia during the COVID-19 pandemic

Background

Care homes across the country have been adversely affected by coronavirus.

The Alzheimer's Society have raised concerns impact the loss of social and family contact has had on residents with dementia. Staff wearing full Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) can be confusing and frightening for residents with dementia.

The Council in partnership with SW London CCG have put together a guide on how to support care homes who are taking care of residents with dementia.

The guide is mainly for care home staff; however, friends and family can also benefit from the information provided.

Local concerns

Some of the concerns care home providers face are

- The loneliness residents experience as a result of lack of contact with friends and family or lack of participation in group activities
- Residents isolation and lack of social interaction resulting in disorientation and contributing to cognitive deterioration
- Residents being frightened when staff wear masks and other PPE
- Residents not understanding the need of social distancing
- Residents wellbeing being impacted by the changes in the home and on their usual routine.

Visiting and Activities

Activities for residents with dementia are important to help them pass time, keep engaged and stimulated. Family visits allow for social stimulation and regular face to face contact with loved ones helps residents with dementia to feel secure, improving their anxiety and mood and helping them maintain basic cognition, communication skills and maintain their independence. There have been some limitations on family visits to care homes during COVID-19 – see guidance is available on the council website; Richmond Visits in care homes

Ideas on visiting and activities

- Ask family members to bring in familiar items that belong to the resident which have been washed/wiped down, when they visit
- Individual activities such puzzles, colouring websites, music, films and tv shows can be carried out on individual tablets
- Newspapers and magazines can be accessed online via tablets

- Concerts, visits to theatre, museums, nature reserves and other places can be accessed virtually
- Group based virtual socially distanced workout classes, chair-based exercises
- Group or individuals walking outdoors.
- When the care home is open for visitors, relatives and friends can go outside for a walk
- Video calls can be used as a way for people living with mild dementia to keep in contact with relatives

Mental Health and Wellbeing

Changes to daily routines can be difficult especially when residents may not understand what is happening to them. Not being able to see their friends and family has led to residents experiencing fear, anxiety, and loneliness.

Ideas on wellbeing

- Referral to the local Community Mental Health Team for support in managing changes in behaviour or any deterioration in the person's well-being
- Activities such as doll or pet therapy to reduce anxiety
- Offering comfort and support in a quiet area when the person is distressed.

PPE

PPE is essential to reducing the risk of spreading COVID-19. However, residents with dementia can become confused or frightened when they interact with staff who wear PPE as some may no longer recognise familiar staff.

Ideas with your PPE:

- Introducing yourself and remind the person why you are wearing PPE
- Laminate your name, role, and a photograph of you to wear around the neck or pinned to clothing
- Laminate a smiley face and attach this to your clothing or carry it with you. This may help the person feel safer when they cannot see facial expressions behind a mask.

Decisions about care and treatment

During COVID-19 it may be necessary to change the way care and support is delivered to residents in care homes. Where residents lack the capacity to consent to these changes it is important to determine if this is a deprivation of the person's liberty and whether a Deprivation of Liberty Safeguards authorisation is needed. In most cases, this will not be the case. For more information see MCA and DOLS in COVID-19

Where a person lacks capacity to make decisions about care and treatment, a best interest decision must be made and documented.

End of Life Care

When residents are in the last months of their life, they need support to live as well as possible and to die with dignity. This may be particularly difficult during COVID-19. It is important to be aware of any advanced decisions made by the person and where these are not in place to fully involve family members in making decisions about the person's care.
