

Controlled Drinking Zones

Controlled Drinking Zones (CDZs) are areas designated by a council in which there has been nuisance, annoyance or disorder associated with the consumption of alcohol.

Within these areas constables can request people to stop drinking alcohol in the designated public places and/or surrender their drink. If people refuse they can be fined up to £500.

Areas covered by a Controlled Drinking Zone

Evidence suggests that there are problems associated with nuisance, annoyance or disorder associated with the consumption of alcohol in Richmond and Twickenham town centres. Other CDZs may be considered in the future if there is enough evidence.

You can view the maps and the list of streets for the Richmond Controlled Drinking Zone and the Twickenham Controlled Drinking Zone below.

Does this mean I can't drink in parks and open spaces in these areas?

Controlled Drinking Zones are not alcohol-free zones. The police would have the discretion whether or not to use their powers. It is not a blanket ban. The Police may use their powers when anti-social behaviour is linked with the consumption of alcohol.

How will I know I'm in a CDZ?

Signs will be put up around the CDZ to let people know the area is covered and what it means.
